“ Aunt Jane was one of the funniest people I knew. She was always doing something goofy to entertain those around her. One of my funniest memories of her was having her hang out of my car window to try to tell the pokey truck in front of us to get out of our way. Not safe, I know, but typical Aunt Jane.

She was also a great cook. When I was young, we had tacos at her house every Saturday night. Last Christmas, that is what we decided to have as our holiday meal. As always, they were the best tacos I ever had. I wish now that I had eaten just one more. She also made amazing potato salad. She didn't have a recipe that she could write down and give you, and even if you tried making it the way she told you to, it never tasted as good as hers.

Aunt Jane was also a popular hostess. Her house was always filled with friends and family. There was always a pitcher of ice tea in the fridge and room for one more at the table. You would often be asked to join in on a game of cards or Yahtzee or give a hand on the current jigsaw puzzle she was working on. And always, always, always, there was laughter.

Aunt Jane said many times that she did not want her funeral to be a sad one, but instead a celebration of her life--a life of friends, and family, and laughter and good food. While her vibrant spirit will be sadly missed, I am glad of all of the good memories I have of her to carry with me.

With love,
Cindy
